OFFICE DAYS
MONDAYS AND SATURDAYS

"The future of the American schools rests with those who are enrolled as students in these institutions today. If each student is graduated with a profound sense of the significance of education for the individual and for society, continued progress of the schools is assured. High school graduates soon become voters. Their knowledge of what constitutes a good school system will guide them in their decisions on school issues. Is there any reason why we should help children to understand the principles of healthful living, of well-used leisure, of home building, of worthy character, of earning a living, without inspiring in these same young people a sense of appreciation for the American institution which helps the nation to achieve these desirable objectives of sound health, happy homes, good character, and material prosperity?"
